The Story

“It is a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune, must be in want of a wife.”

The brilliant opening sentence of Jane Austen's novel, captures the spirit of this story – clever, witty and bright while focusing the reader/audience on the realities of the day, be it social class, the role of women, the need for marriage and the perils of being alone. Lydia Bennet's reckless behaviour is as serious today as it was in 1800.

Jane Austen's Pride and Prejudice certainly has its romantic moments but there is such sharp wit, good humour, social commentary that even a modern audience delights in the final moments as the couples are engaged to a true life partner – Jane and Mr. Bingley, Elizabeth and Darcy.

Christopher Baker's adaptation of the novel makes some bold choices in eliminating Kitty, the 5th sister and making Mary only 12 so the “Janeites” may be up in arms. However, he has captured the spirit, the youthful energy and exuberance of the story while honouring some of Austen's best lines. The play moves like an English country dance. The country dance was a part of the social fabric of the community – where everyone knew everyone and what were the accepted norms- the proper steps. The country dance is comprised of the repeated execution of pre-defined sequences or figures designed for a length of music, which provide interactions with a partner but also the other dancers through a progression so that by the end, a dancer has interacted with everyone in the set. The scenes in the play move quickly and seamlessly from one sequence to the other.

So what happens when the sequence is disrupted? How will they recover and will the dance be changed?

CAST (the ages noted do not need to reflect the age of the actor- spirit is what counts!) The play has 20 speaking roles - 11 f/9 m

The Bennets

Elizabeth Bennet, early 20's, bright, lively, intelligent, witty, lovely. Jane Austen delighted in her creation and so she should. Lizzie is the one literary character who many young women aspire to be. Though with few prospects for marriage, she is confident in her values, feelings and choices. Lizzie does not want to settle for an unhappy union even if it means losing Longbourn. Lizzie is confident when speaking to Darcy or Miss Bingley or Lady Catherine. As real truths are revealed, she is prepared to reconsider her opinions and prejudices.

Jane Bennet, the oldest sister, mid 20's, beautiful, kind and graceful. Jane loves her sister, Lizzie for her spirit. Jane walks through the world seeing as much good in people as she can. She is careful and measured when considering Lizzie's criticisms and will caution her. Jane does love Bingley but as she is measured and not as open, her true feelings can be mistaken.

Mrs. Bennet, was a beauty in her youth, charming and irresistible but from the merchant class and, therefore, not a “lady”. Her imperative – find husbands for her daughters. They will inherit little so they must seduce suitors with their charms - as she did! Mrs. Bennet does not have a filter whether in public or private. She says what she feels without consideration of its impact.

Mr. Bennet, a gentleman, current “owner” of Longbourn- He inherited Longbourn – the land makes him a gentleman. On his death, the estate must go to a male heir, Mr. Collins. This accounts for the number of daughters – 4 in the play, 5 in the novel – the hoping for a son.

Mr. Bennet needs his books, library, intelligent conversation. Elizabeth is his favourite. However, too often he gives into the pleadings of his daughters and wife for the sake of his peace and quiet.

Lydia, late teens, a flirt and her mother’s daughter. She cares about the latest fashion, dancing, being the centre of attention and a man in uniform. There is no self-reflection or concern about the impact of her behaviour on her family. With little fortune, she can be and will be taken advantage of by the likes of Wickham.

Mary, early teens, studious, reads, serious-minded and plays the piano. (If older, she should be the potential choice for Mr. Collins but not in this adaptation.) As she is the youngest, she observes all the goings-on and is not yet truly out in society.

The Others

Mr. Darcy, a handsome, proud, VERY rich man – single – He is the archetype of the romantic ideal but with Austen twist. He is proud but within his world at Pemberley, he is known as the best man and master. He loves his sister and looks after her. He is also capable of great love and generosity. He utterly understands the impact of Lydia and Wickham’s behaviour on the Bennet family and on Elizabeth. He did what needed to be done to make things right even with the prospect that Elizabeth would not accept him.

Mr. Bingley, a lovely, sweet, handsome rich man – single – He is just what a young man should be – kind, generous of heart and spirit and rich. He truly is taken by Jane and does love her. However, both Darcy and Caroline can convince him that he will be broken hearted as his love is not reciprocated. He is then convinced of the truth and returns to Netherfield and Jane.

Miss Caroline Bingley, Mr. Bingley’s sister who prefers London society - Caroline is the realist in the family. She also likes having status and wealth. She can appreciate the goodness of Jane but is happy to participate in separating her from her brother. The Bennet family is unacceptable. Does she have designs on Darcy? Does she want Bingley to marry Georgianna Darcy?

Mr. Collins, Mr. Bennet’s cousin, a clergyman who will inherit Longbourn- oh, such a man. He is not a clergyman because of a deep spiritual calling but because it was what was available. A chance recommended him to Lady Catherine. “His veneration of her rank... mingled with his very good opinion of himself...made him altogether a mixture of pride and obsequiousness, self-importance and humility.”

He manages to embarrass and bore his cousins. Lizzie will not marry him but he finds a partner in Charlotte Lucas.

Charlotte Lucas, Elizabeth’s close friend who marries Mr. Collins – Charlotte does not have romantic notions. She is an intelligent young woman and Lizzie’s equal in many ways. Her home is more settled as her father’s estate will not be lost. But she is getting older and there are not many choices out there.

Lady Catherine de Bourgh, Darcy’s wealthy aunt and patroness to Mr. Collins – She is steeped in her status, her place in the world and is an authority on all things. Her direct manner does not deem to take in the feelings of others. She is not to be crossed. She believes her daughter is to marry Darcy and join the two households. She cannot fathom that Darcy might see something in Elizabeth – not possible!

Mr. Gardiner, brother to Mrs. Bennet, uncle to the Bennet girls – Mr. Gardiner is a very successful business man with a lovely home in London though not up to Caroline Bingley’s requirements of a suitable address. He is a good father, a good husband and a good uncle who will look after his family. He is not at all like his sister.

Mrs. Gardiner, married to Mr. Gardiner, aunt to the Bennet girls – Mrs. Gardiner is a cherished aunt who is the opposite of Mrs. Bennet, her sister-in-law. She enjoys the company of her nieces, Jane and Elizabeth and will provide thoughtful counsel.

The Militia

The army or navy was a position for a young man to aspire to in order to have standing- a respected manner to earn a living. Wickham, Denny and Brandon are Militia which means they are not regular army and only called upon in times of war but confined to home defence. There were not barracks, so the Militia was billeted in towns like Meryton. If to go into the regular army as an officer, they would need to purchase their commission. This was often the path of the 2nd or 3rd son who would not inherit property.

Mr. Wickham, a new militiaman and known to Darcy and his family – he is very charming and seductive that even Lizzie could not see through him at first. He will seem very romantic. He is looking for an easy way out and will lie and cheat though seeming to be the best of men. Heaven only knows his real intent in running off with Lydia- perhaps he thought someone would rescue her resulting in money for him.

Mr. Denny, a militiaman, a friend of Lydia's

A genuine young man trying to make his way in the world. He is enjoying his time in Meryton.

Mr. Brandon, a militiaman, a friend of Lydia's

Another genuine young man like his friend Mr. Denny.

Both Denny and Brandon would have been disturbed by Wickham's behaviour. They likely also enjoyed Lydia's vibrant personality but would have been respectful.

The Servants – Mrs. Hall (the Bennet's housekeeper), Mrs. Reynolds (Darcy's housekeeper), Hopkins (Bingley's servant- male in livery) – The servants could also be part of the dances and balls.

Others – militia, dancers and ball guests
